Benford's Law

A forecast that becomes a target is eventually gamed by participants.

See examples: most typical example exam grades (depriving people of erudition)

Any game theory framework needs to account for interactions between information and expectation. This means calibration is typically not valid.

One cannot judge forecasts that lead to action.

Alessio
@Er_Tazzina

"People make projections based on their wishes"
-NNT-